Dana Ray is a namer of the unnamed. Her clients are leaders who don't fit in a neat little category and seek compelling language to explain what they do and why it matters, what came before and what comes next. They represent diverse industries from global health to the arts to design thinking and academia.

Ray also facilitates workshops and keynotes that set the stage for new thought and new speech for cultural leaders. Her custom experiences explore professional identity through the power of precise language and expansive storytelling.

In 2013, Dana received a Fulbright to Bulgaria. In Dobrich, she developed and implemented original curriculum in public school classrooms that equipped students in critical and creative thinking. She continues to work internationally.

Dana holds a Master's in Literature and Writing from Bucknell University. She has been a Writer since she could hold a pencil.
